inburgh uk 24 June, 2010 Train your ears = London As I type, well, more accurately, as my friend Pete types, I am sitting in an uncomfortable folding chair in a dimly lit room at a dark building in Fitzrovia that might be a theatre or a bar. Pete was here, too, and perhaps the bar is out there somewhere. Anyway. The show I'm here for is a word-of-mouth performance run by Scottish radio and TV broadcaster, Louisa Garbett. She has devised a way of involving the public – of having us train our ears to hear the sound of words. Louisa is using the chair I am sitting in, a wooden folding chair like the kind of chair you find in, well, railway stations. It's worth pointing out that there is probably a nice little train station somewhere nearby, probably not in the same space as the sound-tuning chair but in the same area, right, in Fitzrovia. "The chair is really quite a simple thing," says Louisa, "It's just a wooden chair, and it's in a little room. It's dark. There are four speakers in the room. Two are playing the words we're listening to." It's an unlikely setting, even for a word-of-mouth theatre performance. But this is Louisa's way of thinking about what we are doing with the project. This isn't a theatrical performance about sound; it's a word-of-mouth performance with a sound element. "What we do is we train your ears to listen for the sounds of words. I can train your ears to hear many words. It's like learning a musical instrument. You can learn to listen to words, and that's what we're doing here. "We can train your ears to hear lots of words and be able to recognise them when we play the words. We can train your ears to hear a lot of words in different styles of writing," says Louisa. We're sitting on one side of the room, in a kind of buffet-style seating arrangement. Louisa sits at the same side of the room with us. At the other end of the room are two tables, one set up for the audience 82157476af
